INTRODUCTION

Business & Professions Code § 6200, et. seq., confers jurisdiction upon Mandatory Fee Arbitration (MFA) arbitrators to consider and make awards regarding disputes over costs and expenses billed to clients, in addition to disputes over fees. The purpose of this Advisory is to provide guidance to MFA arbitrators regarding disputes over costs and expenses that may arise from time to time in connection with MFA arbitrations. [Note to Mimi update the intro language]

DISCUSSION

A. Key Authorities:

The following California statutes, rules and ethics opinions provide guidance regarding the obligations and duties of an attorney to a client regarding billing for costs and expenses during the course of the representation:

California Rules of Professional Conduct, Rule 1.5

Business and Professions Code §6148 (billing for costs in hourly fee cases)

Business and Professions Code §6147 (billing for costs in contingency cases)

San Diego County Bar Association Legal Ethics Opinion 2013-3

Los Angeles County Bar Association Formal Ethics Opinion 391

In addition, non-California ethics opinions that are cited below can provide secondary guidance, but are not binding authority upon California practitioners. A.B.A. Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993) Billing for Professional Fees, Disbursements and Other Expenses provides a detailed discussion on costs which can be billed to a client and difference between costs and attorney overhead expenses. The ABA's opinion was endorsed by the State Bar Court in Matter of Kroft (1988) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838.

31 B. General Considerations:

32 a. Contractual Interpretation

33 The right of an attorney to charge a client for costs and expenses generally is a matter of 34 contract. Consequently, the arbitrator should first look to the written fee agreement, if one 35 exists, to determine the parties' understandings concerning costs and expenses. The initial 36 agreement is generally considered an arm's-length transaction, where the presumption of 37 overreaching does not apply. See, generally, Setzer v. Robinson (1962) 57 Cal.2d 213; Baron v.
38 Mare (1975) 47 Cal.App.3d 304.

39 However, provisions governing the lawyer's right to charge and collect for fees, costs and 40 expenses are evaluated based upon conditions foreseeable at the time they are made, must be 41 explained fully to the client at the outset and must be fair and reasonable. See, generally,
42 Alderman v. Hamilton (1988) 205 Cal.App.3d 1033; In re County of Orange (1999) 241 B.R.
43 212, 221. As the State Bar Court has explained:

44 Generally, an engagement agreement between a client and an attorney is construed as a 45 reasonable client would construe it. (Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 38, com. d; see 46 also Lane v. Wilkins (1964) 229 Cal.App.2d 315, 323 [in construing contracts between 47 attorneys and clients concerning compensation, construction should be adopted that is 48 most favorable to the client as to the intent of the parties].) Moreover, "it is well 49 established that any ambiguities in attorney-client fee agreements are construed in the 50 client's favor and against the attorney." (In the Matter of Lindmark (Review Dept.2004) 4
51 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668, 676; see also S.E.C. v. Interlink Data Network of Los 52 Angeles, Inc. (9th Cir.1996) 77 F.3d 1201, 1205.)

53 Matter of Brockway (Rev. Dept. 2006) 4 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 944; see also Severson &
54 Werson v. Bolinger (1991 235 Cal.App.3d 1569. Matter of Lindmark (Rev. Dept. 2004) 4 Cal.
55 State Bar Ct. Rptr. 668.

56 Initial disclosure of the basis for charges for costs and expenses, in addition to how fees
57 are to be calculated, fosters communication that will promote the attorney-client relationship.
58 The relationship similarly will be benefitted if the billing statements for services explicitly reflect 59 the basis for the charges so that the client understands how the fee bill was determined. (ABA 60 Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993; See also, Business & Professions Code §§ 6147(a)(2) and 61 6148(b)).

62 Even in the absence of a specific agreement as to costs and expenses in the engagement
63 contract or indeed, of any formal retention agreement, the attorney's fiduciary obligations to the 64 client will include the handling of and charging for costs and expenses such that the attorney's
65 charges for costs and expenses during the course of the representation also must be scrutinized
66 for necessity, reasonableness and fairness. See, Gutierrez v. Girardi (2011) 194 Cal.App.4th 925.
67 [The cited case does not support the highlighted language—is there better authority.] The 68 question of whether a cost or expense may be incurred and charged to the client generally is 69 within the implied authority of the attorney, as an agent for the client, unless specifically 70 prohibited by the fee agreement. [Steve: had a question here] See, Civil Code section 2319 ["An agent has authority . . . to do everything necessary or proper and usual, in the ordinary course of business, for effecting the purpose of the agency.”]. Thus, absent specific client instructions not to incur a particular cost or expense, the arbitrator’s review will be only as to the necessity, reasonableness and fairness, or the possible unconscionability of the disputed cost or expense item. [Again, is there authority for this?]

b. Statutory Requirements

Agreements to charge fees and costs in a non-contingent fee matter must comply with Business & Professions Code §6148. Subsection (b) sets forth statutory requirements for what must be included in a bill and provides that that the cost and expense portion of the bill “shall clearly identify the costs and expenses incurred and the amount of the costs and expenses.”

Agreements in contingent fee cases are governed by Business & Professions Code §6147. Subsection (a)(2) provides that the agreement shall include “A statement as to how disbursements and costs incurred in connection with the prosecution or settlement of the claim will affect the contingency fee and the client’s recovery.”

Business & Professions Code section 6147(b) and 6148(c) provide that the failure of the lawyer’s bills to clearly identify the costs and expenses incurred may also render the fee agreement voidable at the option of the client.

c. Other General Considerations

It generally is held that in the absence of agreement to the contrary, an attorney may not charge a client for normal overhead expenses associated with properly maintaining, staffing and equipping an office, including the expense of maintaining a library. (Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 38\(3\)\(a\); ABA Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993); SDCBA Opinion 2013-3 pp.3-5.) The reasoning is that when a client has engaged an attorney to provide professional services for a fee (whether calculated on the basis of the number of hours expended, a flat fee, a contingent percentage of the amount recovered or otherwise) the reasonable expectation of the client would be that charges for general office overhead are included in the attorney’s fee. Thus, in the absence of disclosure to the client in advance of the engagement to the contrary, the client should reasonably expect that the attorney’s overhead costs in maintaining a library, securing malpractice insurance, renting of office space, purchasing utilities and the like would be subsumed within the charges the attorney is making for professional services. (SDCBA Opinion 2013-3 at p. 4; ABA Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993); see, also, In the Matter of Kroff (1996) 3 Cal. State Bar Ct. Rptr. 838 (1998) endorsing ABA Formal Opinion 93-379; In re Tom Carter Enterprises, Inc., 55 B.R. 548 (1985).) Thus, with respect to items traditionally viewed as overhead, unless the agreement is clear that such expenses will be charged, the attorney should not be able to recover them. (SDCBA Opinion 2013-3 at p.5; [Rest.3d Law Governing Lawyers § 38\(3\)\(a\).)

On the other hand, the attorney may recoup costs and expenses reasonably incurred in connection with the client’s matter for non-overhead costs incurred, including services performed in-house, such as photocopying, long distance telephone calls, computer research, special deliveries, secretarial overtime, and other similar services so long as the charge reasonably reflects the lawyer's actual cost for the services rendered.” (SDCBA Opinion 2013-3 at p. 5 (citing ABA Formal Opinion 93-179).) As discussed more particularly below, recoverable in-house costs and expenses include items such as photocopying, postage and messenger costs, long-distance phone charges, travel and parking, computer research charges. [Bundy: needs clarification about what can be recovered.] Even when the agreement does clearly encompass such expenses, they remain subject to scrutiny for necessity, reasonableness and fairness, whether they are billed periodically to the client or charged against the client's recovery under a contingent fee contract. See, generally, California Practice Guide on Professional Responsibility, The Rutter Group, 5:550-5:552.

When charging for costs and expenses, the charges must reasonably reflect the attorney's actual cost for the services rendered or billed. The attorney may not add a profit element or mark-up on top of such actual cost, except where the client gives informed written consent to such profit element. American Bar Association (ABA) Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993). See also Matter of Kroff; and the SDCBA Opinion 2013-3 at pp. 5-6.

C. Charges for Specific Costs and Expenses

Percentage of Fees Administrative Charges: One way some attorneys have sought to recoup costs incurred in the representation of a client without providing an itemized billing for costs is to charge the client an additional percentage amount, above the agreed upon fee, to reflect such costs. There is no direct California authority regarding the propriety of charging an administrative fee in lieu of itemized billing of in-house expenses. In Matter of Kroff, the State Bar Court noted that whether lawyers ethically may charge a flat periodic fee or lump sum to cover disbursements “is a matter of some controversy.” The court stated that such charges may be valid if the client has given informed consent to arrangement and it does not result in an unreasonable charge to the client. (Matter of Kroff, supra at 13.) Thus, any such agreement should be scrutinized for unconscionability pursuant to California Rules of Professional Conduct (CRPC) Rule 1.5, such as where it can be established that the administrative charges are unduly high due to the size of the bill unrelated to the actual overhead consumed in support of the billed fees.

While no California ethics opinions has addressed the propriety of an administrative fee in lieu of an itemized bill for in-house costs and expenses, ethics opinions from other states are split on the issue. (See, e.g., Va. LE Op. 1056 (1988) [approving a 4% overhead charge based upon the amount of the fee pursuant to a written fee agreement in matters not involving litigation]; Arizona State Bar Formal Ethics Opinion 94-10 [a lawyer may charge a percentage surcharge in lieu of billing actual expenses and costs if agreed to in writing, approximating the actual costs, and the amount charged is reasonable]; but see Florida Bar Staff Opinion 30989 (2012) [a 4% administrative charge may not be imposed for each file even if it is disclosed in the client's contract as it would be impossible for each client to give truly informed consent to a cost average or administrative fee/charge without knowing the actual cost amount for all clients].)

In the bankruptcy context, courts have disallowed claims by counsel for reimbursement of in-house expenses calculated by utilizing a percentage of the total fee. (See, e.g., In re Command Services Corp., (Bankr N.D.N.Y. 1988) 85 B.R. 230, 234 [“Only fully documented, actual, out-of-pocket expenses will be reimbursed; the Court cannot condone, for whatever reason, a percentage method to establish actual and necessary expenses within the meaning of Code § 330(a)(a).”]; In re Williams (Bankr N.D. Cal 1989) 102 B.R. 197, 198-199 [“As a matter of law, the Court finds that an expense is not “actual,” and therefore not reimbursable under section 330(a)(2), to the extent that it is based on any sort of guesswork, formula, or pro rata allocation. Concrete documentation, in the form of receipts and invoices, is therefore necessary to support any application for reimbursement.”].)

Travel and Parking: Normally, where the engagement reasonably requires the attorney to travel on behalf of the client in the course of the representation the client can reasonably expect to be billed as a disbursement the reasonable amount of the airfare, taxicabs, meals while traveling, parking and hotel room. ABA Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993), See also, Code of Civil Procedure §1033.5(S)(C) [travel expenses to attend depositions as an allowable item of costs in litigation]; . But see, e.g., In re Tom Carter Enterprises, Inc., 55 B.R. 548 (1985) [parking is considered general overhead not recoverable from a bankruptcy estate].

Luncheons and meals: These are considered general overhead, and are not recoverable from a bankruptcy estate. See, e.g., In re Tom Carter Enterprises, Inc., 55 B.R. 548 (1985); see, also, In re Maruko Inc., 160 B.R. 633 (1993); [in house luncheons among attorney staff alone are considered overhead]. Where requested and approved by the client, such luncheon expenses may be charged to the client. However, meal expenses incurred while traveling for depositions, out-of-town travel on a case may be a proper cost charged to the client. (ABA Formal Opinion 93-379, p.7; Howard v. American National Fire Ins. Co. (2010) 187 Cal.App. 4th 498, 541 [analyzing recovery of meal expenses as an item of recoverable costs under Code of Civil Procedure §1033.5]; but see, Gorman v. Tassajara Development Corp. (2009) 178 Cal.App.4th 44, 72 [distinguishing between local meal expenses and meals incurred while traveling].)

Secretarial and staff: Regular secretarial services are normally considered general overhead, and are not recoverable from a bankruptcy estate. See, e.g., In re Tom Carter Enterprises, Inc., 55 B.R. 548 (1985). However, if secretarial overtime was incurred because of an emergency or time exigency related to the client’s case, then such costs may be billed to the client as a cost. (SDCBA 2013-3 pp. 7-8.) Other staff overtime is also generally considered part of general attorney overhead, except where actions of the client or the nature of the case may require extraordinary overtime.

Messenger Services: Such charges may be billed where the needs of the matter or of the client legitimately and reasonably require the service and where the client may agree in advance to such charges. SDCBA 2013-3; ABA Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993). However, such charges may not be reasonable where the need for such delivery services arises from the attorney’s procrastination or inattention.

Computer Assisted Legal Research (CALR): Billing for CALR is not a settled issue as courts are split on whether some portion of electronic research expenses should be considered overhead costs that are not charged to the client. (See, e.g., Cairns v. Franklin Mint Co. (C.D. Cal 2000) 115 F.Supp.2d 1185, 1189.) There is a school of thought that holds that CALR is overhead, particularly as is the case more and more where the attorney’s “library” is predominately electronic and the attorney or law firm has a fixed-fee contract with the service

195 provider. Another school of thought holds that CALR is billable to the client; and, such charges
196 specifically have been found to be recoverable from a bankruptcy estate. See, In re Maruko Inc., 197 160 B.R. 633 (1993); In re Tom Carter Enterprises, Inc., 55 B.R. 548 (1985). In SDCBA 2013-
198 3, the Committee, applying ABA Formal Opinion 93-379 as endorsed by the State Bar Court in 199 Kroff, concluded that an attorney could legitimately charge a client the actual direct cost of 200 CALR.

201 In light of developing law in this area, at a minimum, the arbitrator should first confirm 202 whether such charges have been agreed to by the client in advance. The next area of inquiry will 203 be the reasonableness of the charge. If the charge is based on the firm's actual cost, it may be 204 billed to the client as a cost in connection with the representation. Some providers offer "pro-
205 forma" invoices for such charges, but these are not usually the actual amount charged to the firm
206 relative to each client. Thus, where such charges are passed along to the client, the arbitrator
207 should inquire as to the methodology used to assure that the charges were reasonably allocated
208 among all clients using such services for the month or other billing period. Again, the arbitrator 209 should determine whether the client knowingly and voluntarily agreed to pay any premium [what 210 does premium mean in this context—do we mean profit or markup?] charged for CALR.
211 Finally, the arbitrator should consider the mathematical unfairness, if any, where, for example,
212 the attorney pays $1,000 per month for the services and one client is the only client using the 213 service for the month. Under such circumstances, charging the client the full $1,000 for a small 214 amount of CALR may be improper and potentially unconscionable.

215 Photocopying: Discrete or large photocopying projects specific to a client's 216 representation may generally be charged to the client, especially where there is some 217 extraordinary need for such services, including pleadings, document productions, etc., and where 218 the client agrees in advance. Thus, the attorney and the client may agree in advance that, for 219 example, photocopying will be charged at $.15 per page. However, the question arises what may 220 be charged to the client, in the absence of a specific agreement to the contrary, when the client
221 has simply been told that costs for these items will be charged to the client. Under those 222 circumstances the attorney is obliged to charge the client no more than the direct cost associated 223 with the service (i.e., the actual cost of making a copy on the photocopy machine) plus a
224 reasonable allocation of overhead expenses directly associated with the provision of the service
225 (e.g., a fair percentage of the salary of a photocopy machine operator). See, ABA Formal
226 Opinion 93-379 (1993); SDCBA Legal Ethics Opinion 2013-3. On the other hand, where a large 227 photocopying project may be completed by an outside provider at a page rate less than the 228 general page rate agreed upon by the attorney and client at the outset of the representation, the 229 attorney ~~should~~ may want to consider retaining an outside service (subject to client 230 confidentiality safeguards) to complete the project and bill the client only for the actual cost of 231 the project charged by the outside provider.

232 Long Distance Calls: Long-distance telephone charges incurred in a client's case have 233 generally been considered a cost which can be charged to the client, as opposed to an overhead
234 expense, especially if the fact that an attorney will charge the cost of long-distance calls is 235 included in the fee agreement. (See, ABA Formal Opinion 93-379 (1993); SDCBA Legal Ethics
236 Opinion 2013-3.) However, given the current state of telephonic communication through cell
237 phones or internet phone services (VoIP), long distance calls could be considered part of general
238 overhead which should not be billed as separate expenses. An exception would be where the call charge is for an attorney's out-of-contract call (such as international calls may be) or part of a video conference or involving multiple parties where the attorney will be billed in addition to the attorney's general telephone cost. However, [Sarah: Might not necessarily be true. If its included in the atty's contract, may not necessarily be true that you cant charge for it.] [I don't understand this. If the agreement says that the firm can recoup expenses for long distance calls relating to the client's matter, why can't it do so?]

Process Service: It is appropriate to bill the client for such charges where provided by an outside service. See, e.g., In re Tom Carter Enterprises, Inc., 55 B.R. 548 (1985). Where such service is provided by in-house employees, the charge to the client should be no more than the reasonable cost to the attorney measured by a reasonable percentage of the employee's overall salary. [Does the agreement have to list process service specifically?]

Witness Fees: These fees are expenses that properly may be charged to the client. (See, e.g., In re Tom Carter Enterprises, Inc., 55 B.R. 548 (1985); Ojeda v. Sharo Cabrillo Hospital (1992) 8 Cal.App.4th 1, 8 ["Traditionally, the costs associated with a lawsuit have included items such as transcript, filing, service and jury fees and hourly compensation paid to experts who serve as witnesses or consultants."].)

In the context of Mandatory Fee Arbitration proceedings, disputes regarding witness fees typically relate to the cost of expert witnesses. Clients are often surprised by the amount of expert fees incurred in their case. The client's responsibility for potential expert witness fees as a cost incurred in a case are often set forth in the fee agreement. Thus, an arbitrator should first review the provisions of the fee agreement where there is a dispute regarding expert witness fees charged to the client. If the fee agreement does not include a provision regarding expert witness fees, in litigation matters the hiring of experts is usually within the attorney's implied authority and may be billed to the client.

Filing & Other Court Fees: Filing fees and other court charges including mandatory e-filing charges are recoverable as costs. Discretionary court costs may require the agreement of the client, but an attorney generally has broad implied authority to incur costs which are reasonably necessary to the client's case. For example, many courts no longer provide a court reporter for law and motion hearings or other matters so an attorney must specifically request and pay for reporter expenses. While a client may dispute the necessity of this type of discretionary expense, if it is reasonably necessary to the client's case such expenses are likely within the scope of an attorney's implied authority.

CONCLUSION

The reasonableness, fairness or unconscionability of an attorney's charges for costs and expenses can never be a matter of exact mathematical calculation. Rather, the attorney's charges for costs and expenses should be evaluated pursuant to the fee agreement, and also examined for necessity, reasonableness, disclosure, method of calculation and the reasonable expectations of the client. Such examination also should include reference to the foregoing guidelines of what the arbitrator may consider when the client may dispute the attorney's charges for costs and expenses.
